

Case Study - Genetic Pilar Cyst

Treating Genetic Problems through the Next Generation

“...everything was great and went smoothly...”

The Problem

A patient presented to our office with numerous scalp cysts. She remembered that her mom had a very similar issue and was able to fix the problem in just a few visits when she came to our office. Fed up with the cysts becoming irritated and traumatized each time she brushed her hair, she decided to make an appointment with us as well.

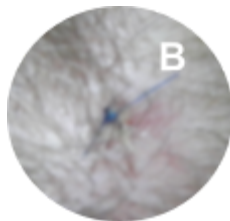

The Solution:

When she came to the office, she learned more about her condition. Patients with familial pilar cysts are often younger and often present with multiple lesions at the same time. In early November, she presented with three pilar cysts that were large enough to bother her. By February, all of these cysts had been removed using minimally invasive procedures and the surgical scars had healed.

“It was easy to make appointments and everything was great and went smoothly,” she said. “The staff was friendly and accommodating. I was surprised he was always on time – I never had to wait.”

The Remarkable Results:

The patient was very happy with the results and plans on returning to our office for any new cysts that appear.
