

CASE STUDY

Managing Chronic Wounds and Chronic Diseases

THE PROBLEM

A patient was referred to our practice with chronic wounds which he had for 3 months, but were still not healing. The patient had been managing chronic lymphedema for several years. He was exhausting ways to treat his wounds and the underlying condition which was causing them.

THE SOLUTION

At our practice, the patient was shown several different methods for managing the swelling in his legs, including compression stockings, more complex multilayer compression, and lymphedema pumps. After 2 months, his extensive wounds were healed and the patient had multiple options for compression to prevent more wounds from forming.

THE RESULTS

While the patient occasionally has to return to the office for minor wounds reopening, he is always able to call the office and be seen in the same week. Now, his wounds can be healed in just 7 weeks with early and aggressive treatment.

“Dealing with my kind of problem is difficult. I have done the best to cooperate with the doctor and physician assistants. The service is good and I have no complaints.”
